Summary: A dramione poem. It's simple. You'll probably like it.

Fate is funny

Fate is funny.
>Zodiac wrist tattoos and destiny intertwining,
stars out shining,

>greyhound bites forever pining.

Fate is funny.
>His and her breaths,
true love's first test,
>letters declaring one's manifest.

Fate is funny.
>Friends dangle between love and hate,
a forgotten lock on a forgotten gate,
>hounds make break for great escape.

Fate is funny.
>Rings of silver, rings of gold,
known not yet what to behold,

>icy hearts no longer cold.

Fate is funny.
>He loved her more than life itself,
refused to pose her on a shelf,
>instead he loved her for herself.

Fate is funny.
>She loved him more than life itself,
she'd never trade him for an elf,
>instead she loved him for himself.

Fate is funny.

>Smoke and bone settle the ground,
forever searching and never found,
>howling, snarling hounds surround.

Fate is funny.
>They fought to live
and lived to die.
>No longer stood on different sides.

Fate was funny.
